Dean's Welcome

Professor Ming-Yan Shieh

Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to Taiwan!
Thank you for coming to the 12th Annual ASLI Conference 2015.

Over the years, ASLI has made significant contributions to the evolution of Asian legal regimes through creating collaboration networks in legal scholarship, and facilitating intellectual dialogue between legal scholars and practitioners from each ASLI member institutions. In the past decade, impressive intellectual discourses presenting cutting-edge legal scholarship and real-world legal practice skills combining unique Asian culture with diverse regional characteristics have brought fruitful results to the ASLI's annual conference series and make each year's annual conference a successful one! ASLI's annual conferences not only help participants from ASLI member institutions to learn from each other through discussion and exchange of views, but also encourage pioneering legal scholarship and research to adapt the law and jurisprudence to modern social needs, eventually contributing to the continuous improvement of each Asian country's legal regimes in the long run.

The theme of this year's conference is "Law 2.0—New Challenges in Asia." We choose "Rubik's cube" as the key visual of the conference because it perfectly illustrates the profound and fascinating charm of jurisprudence in a visualized way easily understood by everyone. Here today I would like to extend my sincere gratitude to all of you because this conference would not be a success without your tremendous support. First, my special thanks go to the ASLI team at National University of Singapore Faculty of Law as they generously share their experience with us. Next, I would like to express my appreciation to all planning committee members of this year's conference for their remarkable effort. I would also like to add my sincere gratitude to all sponsoring institutions for their significant support. Finally, on behalf of the host institution, I would like to thank everyone here for participating in this conference. It is my sincerest hope that legal scholars from different Asian countries will have more communications and closer collaborations between each other through participating in all ASLI events.

Director's Welcome

Professor Andrew J. Harding

Dear ASLI Participants,

It is my enormous pleasure to welcome you all again to the annual ASLI Conference here in Taipei. And for those of you who have not attended before – a Special Welcome!

I wish to express our extreme gratitude to National Taiwan University's Faculty of Law for hosting the event and for doing such a great job on our behalf. For many of us including myself the annual conference is the highlight of the conference season and the academic session.

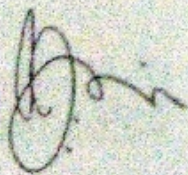

After 12 years ASLI is still gaining in strength and relevance. We have this year more than 190 participants from 26 countries, and in the last year we have added 13 more institutions to the list of ASLI members. This year in addition to the annual conference we will be holding a research colloquium hosted by Shanghai Jiaotong University in November entitled, Legal Education in Asia: From Imitation to Innovation. We hope the research symposium will be an annual event, so please consider whether your institution should be putting forward a proposal to host such an event in 2016 or 2017.

We have a great academic feast in store for us this year. Please check the programme and you will see this is borne out by the range, interest and quality of the papers. Many good papers did not make it onto the programme through lack of space and we hope those whose papers were not successful will try again next time round.

Another innovation this year is that we will award three prizes for the best papers, and we have struck a committee to make the decisions which will be announced in the closing session of the conference.

I am sure that, as always, you will enjoy the conference and the special atmosphere it creates. I look forward to meeting as many as possible of you in the next two or three days.

Warm wishes to all of you,

Andrew J Harding
Director, ASLI & CALS
