Dear Dr. Achmad,

In reference to your article reviewed, please find the reviewer's comments, make sure to do the corrections as suggested by the reviewer and revert back to us at your earliest convenience.

Note: kindly highlight the corrections in yellow colour or show the track changes. So that reviewer can follow the corrections.

Reviewer Comments:

Line number	Reviewer's Comments/Suggestions
Line 7	Put in italic form the name of the plant: Muntingia calabura
Line 7	Correct the sentence: 'Jamaican Cherry leaves (Muntingia calabura L.) ethanol extract' by 'The ethanol extract of Jamaican cherry (Muntingia calabura L.) leaves
Line 9	Correct: 'The gut microbiota imbalances can cause'
Line 14	Correct 'Alloxan (160 mg/kg bw)
Line 15	Remove the repetition of 'group'
Line 16	Correct 'with the ethanol extract of Jamaican cherry leaf
Line 119	Correct: 'Alloxan was dissolvent
Line 128	Correct: 'Preparation of ethanol extract from Jamaican cherry leaves'
Line 396	Correct 'deffences'

The paper could be accepted by the journal but it should be revised :

- The English language should be carefully revised.
- The objective of the study should be added to the introduction
- Flavonoid composition of cherry leaf extract should be determined.

Note: Your article needs extensive English language editing, either you get it done by yourself through any topmost English language editing services like Editage and send us the English language editing certificate along with your updated manuscript at the earliest for further processing or else if you wish you can pay us for your article English language editing and we will get it done on your behalf.

Kindly acknowledge the email to confirm safe delivery.

Indeed We are confused about JPAM steps to process our manuscript. After revising the reviewer comments, English proofreading, paying the APC, and language editing, We were asked to confirm that it is the same as our manuscript purpose. Now you mentioned our article back to under review again. Please read our previous correspondence carefully in detail. Because I do not think that is normal after a manuscript has been revised, APC Payment, and English language editing, the current process is back to under review. We are waiting for your clarification soon.

Dear Dr. Hendri

In reference to your article reference no. JPAM/7883/22 accepted for publication in Journal of Pure and Applied Microbiology, you are requested to please go through the galley proof very carefully, and if you have any corrections/modifications, please inform us within a week; If no further corrections are required; kindly approve the same so that we can proceed with the online publication of your article.

Important Checkpoints: Please go through the following points very carefully and make sure the article is error-proof before approving it for publication.

1. Check the article category (like Research, Review, Mini Review, Case Report, Short Communication, etc.).
2. Check for author(s) name and their complete affiliations along with their ORCID Ids.
3. Kindly make sure the title of the article is correct and doesn't contain any mistakes.
4. Check the abstract and keywords very carefully.
5. Check for Figures and Tables and their placement (Please send original/high-resolution figures if possible).
6. Check the Declaration Statements, whichever is applicable (Acknowledgments, Conflict of Interest, Author's Contribution, Funding, Ethics Statement, Data Availability, and Informed Consent).
7. Check for In-text citation numbers and their respective References All references should be strictly formatted according to the journal reference style, i.e. AMA (American Medical Association). Kindly provide the DOI or the online URL for every reference.

8. Kindly cross-check the article thoroughly and make sure that the article is free from any grammatical error, punctuation error, spelling error, numbering error, etc.

Note: Kindly mention all the corrections as highlighted text/sticky notes in the attached galley proof PDF file only. We are here to make all the corrections you mentioned, but no additional corrections will be entertained once the galley proof is approved and the same is published online under our website "Articles in Press" section. Thanks for understanding.

We look forward to your reply.

Dear Dr. Khan

I'm greatly looking forward to your email for this session; sadly, your alerts aren't as quick as those from the ORCID system 😊 .

Anyway, thank you for your energy and passion.

Dear Dr. Arifiyanto

Hope you are doing well!

We want to inform you that your article entitled "Kersen (Muntingia calabura L.) Ethanol Extract Repairs Pancreatic Cell Damage, Total Coliforms, and Lactic Acid Bacteria in Hyperglycemic Mice" has been published in the current issue, i.e. Volume 16, Issue 3, September 2022. You can find the full-text of your article here: <https://microbiologyjournal.org/current-issue/>

Please remember to share only the final publisher version PDF of your article among your colleagues, friends, all social media platforms and on all social networking websites for academics to increase the visibility of your article or else you can share the unique DOI link: <https://doi.org/10.22207/JPAM.16.3.41>

Importance of citation count: If you are a researcher, you know the importance of this number. The number of times an academic paper is cited has become a major measure of its research impact. Increasing your Citation count can positively impact your career because funding agencies often look at a combination of the number of papers and the number of citations when making grant decisions.

To boost your citation count to maximize impact, consider these simple techniques.

1. Cite your past work when it is relevant to a new article. However, do not reference every paper you have written just to increase your citation count. Note: Refrain yourself from high Self-Citation and Self-reference.
2. Use social media and academic social networking sites. Provide links to your papers on social media (e.g., Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, Quora, Academia.edu, ResearchGate, Mendeley, Google Scholar), Websites that you contribute to, your institution's repository, subject repository, ORCID profile and your university profile page. Encourage colleagues to link to your article. Note: The more inbound links to your article, the more search engines like Google will value and highlight your content.
3. Actively promote your work. Talk to other researchers about your paper, email PDF copies of your final published paper to researchers and share your article link to those who may be interested. Create a blog or a website dedicated to your research and share it. Important: Email publisher version PDF of your article (final PDF) to all the references present in your article as they are the ones who are most active and interested in your research.
4. Google Scholar. Add your article to your existing Google Scholar Profile; please create one if you do not have one.
5. Share your data. There is evidence that sharing your data can increase your citations. Consider posting to data sharing websites, such as figshare or SlideShare, or contributing to Wikipedia and providing links to your published manuscripts.
6. Link all your published articles to your ORCID profile. Remember to make your ORCID profile and complete data publicly available.
7. Read and share your article. If you have institutional access, please read and share your article by logging in to the Web of Science (Clarivate) and Scopus (Elsevier) databases where your article is being Indexed. Also, ask the co-authors, friends and students to do the same.

8. Make your manuscript easily accessible. Post your post-publication prints to a repository. Check Sherpa Romeo to find Journal of Pure and Applied Microbiology copyright and self-archiving policies regarding sharing your published manuscript.

Note: Kindly find your article's final publisher version PDF file attached to this email. Also, please share this email with all the co-authors of this article and ask them to share their published research as much as possible; this will help us make our published work widely discoverable.

Thanks and Regards
