Manuscript Title: EXPLORING FOREIGN LANGUAGE LEARNERS' PERCEPTIONS DURING THE NEGOTIATION OF MEANING: UNFOCUSED TASK AND FOCUSED TASK

Abstract: Abstract

This study set out to explore the fourth-semester students' perceptions of unfocused and focused task. The participants of this study were 3 types of pairs; high-high, high-low and low-low pairs. An adapted open-ended interview aimed at measuring perceptions of unfocused and focused tasks served as the instrument. The results demonstrate the following: 1) the unfocused task is enjoyable to all the three types of pairs, but they fail to get input for the good of the development of their language quality, 2) the focused task is enjoyable to H-H and H-L pairs for different reasons, and too difficult and stressful to an L-L pair. With all this in mind, it is the researchers' hope that further studies involving more categories as efforts to investigate this field further will shortly be conducted.

Keywords: Perception, unfocused task, focused task, language proficiency.

My honorable editor,

I am happy to know that our manuscript was accepted to be published in your International journal of English Language and Literature Studies.

My manuscript number is IJELLS/1109/2021. Anyhow, I want to confirm about the payment. Is it USD 1500? Such amount is too big for us and we'd be very happy if it can be lower.

I look forward to hearing further information. Thank you.
